Women soldiers Women soldiers or women in uniform are women who are or have been employed in the military. Australia Aboriginal women in the Australian Army In the Australian Army, since the 1950s female soldiers have been found in combat, becoming "the first group of women to be involved in field combat in Australia"., only 14 female soldiers have served in a combat role. The Australian Army has had various levels of women in combat since the 1950s. As of 1990 there were some 17 women in the Australian Army who had served as soldiers on regular basis (in the 1970s some women served in combat roles, but mostly as nursing personnel). In the early 1980s the new "all gender" commissions were introduced, where women would be granted commissions as of their seventeenth birthday. By the mid 1980s, senior level officers had publicly remarked that no more female soldiers would be admitted. Women were not permitted to fight in the conflicts of the 1990s, but in 2001 women were allowed to be members of the Army Reserve for the first time. In 2004 the Defence Act was amended to allow women to serve in combat roles if they had earned the Australian Defence Force's Combat Medal. By 2013, the Australian Army has around 2,000 women in uniform., some 21 women have served in combat roles, the majority in non-combat roles. Women in the Australian Defence Force Women have been serving in the Australian Defence Force since 1982. Dates of service for women in the ADF are listed in the table below. In 2005, the Defence Minister of Australia, Joel Fitzgibbon, said that the Australian Army was not interested in drafting women into combat roles, and if there were to be change to that policy it would only be via a change in the law. Roles for women in the Australian Defence Force Women are employed in a variety
